Albertans make the largest average charitable donations compared to other Canadians

Alberta Culture Study

The questionnaire was developed in collaboration with LaPlaca Cohen, Nanos Research, and Business for the Arts. LaPlaca Cohen is a New York-based strategy, marketing, and design firm, and this study builds on their long-running Culture Track research initiative in the United States.

Key takeways
Key Takeaways

Belonging and connecting are key unprompted motivators of Albertan’s participation in cultural activities.

Albertans say bringing people of the same culture together as a community or bringing people of different cultures together to share knowledge, unity and a sense of community are some of the greatest impacts a cultural organization can have on the world.
Key Takeaways

While having fun and experiencing new things are important motivators to cultural participation, interest in the content is still a key motivator to cultural participation.

Not believing an activity is for someone like them is the key barrier to cultural participation for Albertans.
Key Takeaways

The use of technology in cultural activities is limited for Albertans, and like Canadians, Albertans are divided on whether technology should be included in cultural activities. Albertans tend to prefer an analogue experience for benchmark arts while preferring a digital experience for educational activities such as museums.
Key Takeaways

Community is an important factor for Albertans when it comes to donating to cultural organizations. Valuing the impact a cultural organization has on the community and the world, and wanting to give back to their community are key motivators for Albertans.
Key Takeaways

Albertans make the largest average and median charitable donations when compared to other Canadians, however, like Canadians, cultural organizations are still one of the organizations/charities the least frequently donated to.

Organizations could increase monetary support by breaking down the current barriers, which vary according to generation and location. For Millennials, not being asked is the key barrier to cultural donations while believing the taxes they pay already support is the key barrier for Pre-war participants.
Methodology
On behalf of Business for the Arts, Nanos Research conducted an online survey of 1,004 residents of Alberta who have participated in a cultural activity in the last 12 months, 18 years of age or older, between December 21st, 2017 and January 11th, 2018. This was part of a larger national study of 6,400 Canadians who participated in a cultural activity in the last 12 months, 18 years of age or older, between December 21st, 2017 and January 11th, 2018.

The questionnaire for the study drew upon the Culture Track tracking study but was tailored to the Canadian cultural market.

To be comparable with the US study, Nanos used a non-probability panel of Canadians in Alberta to recruit participants and therefore a traditional margin of error for probability research should not be applied to the research.
